It was a hobby I enjoyed since young. However, I gave it up once I was busy with my studies.

As of late, I have been relearning to play the piano after a long hiatus. I practise in the (21) living room in the quiet of the late evenings. I enjoy these sessions very much. Whenever (22)

my piano teacher comes for our weekly lesson, I usually falter even though I practise playing the piano almost every day. I thought that I am actually doing well until she scolds me for not following her instructions. I am enticed to say, "Just let me play it!" But she has a larger purpose. (23)

She wants me to learn to understand and use the tools that proficient pianists use. Slowly I am (24) learning to combine the things in such a way that they become fully or part of each other and put (25) into use what I have learnt. The names of the tools she is teaching me are not important but what matters most is what those tools permit me to do when I play.

Section F: Comprehension MCQ (5 x 1 mark)

Read the passage below and answer questions 26 to 30.

Marianne opened the door and let me in. Derek was in his wheelchair by the kitchen table wearing a loose cotton shirt and even looser black sweatpants. It looked as if the pants belonged to someone else. His legs had shrunk a great deal. If you put your two hands around his thighs, your fingers might touch. Had he been able to stand, he would have been no more than five feet tall and he could probably fit into the jeans of a nine-year-old. 5

"I got you something," I announced, holding up a brown paper bag. I had stopped on my way from the airport at a nearby supermarket and bought some turkey, potato salad, macaroni salad and bagels. I wanted to do something for Derek. I could not help him otherwise. I remembered his fondness for eating.

"Ah, so much food!" he sang. "The hospital would never have given me such delicacies," he added as an afterthought. 10

We sat at the kitchen table and talked about our school days. During our conversation, I noticed that Derek only ate small amounts of the spread in front of him. The bagels and turkey were left largely untouched. Occasionally, he had to stop to use the washroom, a process that took a lot of time. Marianne would wheel him to the toilet, then lift him from the wheelchair. Each time he came back, he looked tired and a little uneasy. 15

"Are you all right?" I asked. Derek sighed.

"I'm sorry. This is so embarrassing. I have to depend completely on others now. But I am working on it. I'm trying to enjoy the process. After all, I get to be a baby one more time!" Derek explained. He laughed and I was relieved that he did. We talked for a long time before I finally decided that it was time to go home. 20

"See you again next Friday," he said, as he waved weakly to me.

Adapted from Tuesdays With Morrie by Mitch Albom

26. Derek's pants appeared very loose because _____.
- (1) they were a pair of 'nine-year-old' jeans
  - (2) they belonged to someone else

Section K: Comprehension Open-ended (10 x 2 marks)

Read the passage below and answer questions 71 to 80.

My father gets a faraway look in his eyes that is unmistakable. As his craggy face turns towards the horizon and his eyes seek out the glint of snow-capped peaks, we all know what he is thinking. Mountain tops always have had that magnetic effect on him.

Dad married my mother, Louise, a musician, just three months after his return from Mount Everest and I was born the following year. I was ten when he first took me climbing with Mingma, his foreman from the Mount Everest area in Nepal. I always had the feeling that my parents thought I needed some strenuous activities because I liked writing poems, pressing flowers in the pages of my notebooks and bird-watching. Moreover, they were afraid that I would become too "soft" for my own good. Dad decided that he and Mingma would take me up to Mount Fog in the South Island of New Zealand. 5 10

In the evening, we climbed up the grassy flank and as darkness drew over us, we nestled down into long, golden grass to sleep beneath the stars. I was very thirsty but we had no water with us – just two cans of beer that Dad and Mingma were sipping from. "You'll have to have some of this, son," Dad said. I could not believe what vile stuff it was!

The next day, we climbed up the slopes to a rocky ridge. From there, we needed to traverse a large snowfield to the summit. Clumps of snow that we kicked loose tumbled down the face of the rocky ridge for hundreds of metres. At that instance, we felt that it was the scariest sight ever. 15

Dad pulled a rope from his pack and we were all tied to it – my father in front, Mingma behind, and I slung in the middle, trying to step from one huge size-14 footprint to the next as we cut across the slope. 20

Periodically, I would look up at my father leading the way, then lose my balance, fall out of his footprints and slip towards the green valley far below. Dad and Mingma would haul on the rope and bungy me back up into the steps from where I had fallen. Each time I slipped, I was extremely sure that Dad would look after me and that all would be fine. 25

However, even the great trees in the forest fall. I was to learn in a devastating manner, at the age of twenty, that beneath his trademark dry and gruff exterior, Dad was just as vulnerable as any of us.

My father had always been a passionate man and one thing he was especially passionate about was the people of the Everest region – so much so that in 1930, he began the first of many projects aimed at improving their lives. In 1975, he had begun building his second hospital in the Himalayas when tragedy struck our family. My mother and youngest sister, Belinda, were flying into the mountains to join him when their small aeroplane crashed. He was no longer the great kauri tree or the giant redwood after that. I knew then that Mum and Belinda would never return. 30 35

It was years before Dad fully came out of this period of darkness. Only by plunging himself into more climbing adventures and into ever more projects in Nepal could he get through it. He has now built forty-two schools and hospitals there.
